LIBRARY

1. Library Director Sarah Shoop stated last year, then-Governor, Kristi Noem, proposed a budget that would've hollowed out the State Library. The State Legislature softened the cuts during its annual lawmaking session, keeping the State Library alive and eligible for a matching federal grant that funds much of the organization's budget. Then, shortly after lawmakers went home in mid-March, President Donald Trump signed an executive order directing the head of the Institute for Museum and Library Services, or IMLS to cut its operations to the "maximum extent allowable by law." Due to these cuts, the State Library is not able to renew its courier contracts for inter-library loan. The contract for the eastern side of the state will end at the end of this month and the contract for the Black Hills will end at the end of September. The Black Hills libraries are going to try to do everything they can to keep the courier contract as many patrons from all libraries depend on the service.
